A statistical evaluation is carried out of a CPM centring algorithm. A simple one-dimensional model is assumed, in which the relative coordinates of the sample points are not known a priori but are initially random. A simple centring algorithm has been shown to fail if applied to this situation; however, the algorithm was found to work well in the case of known relative positions. The results of the evaluation are consistent with this observation.All the mysteries of magic Experience the absolute fun of solving mysteries.
