Nov. 14 (Bloomberg) -- The U.S. Treasury added $33 billion in tax incentives and other direct aid for the auto industry to its emergency fiscal measures aimed at stimulating the U.S. economy. The tax incentives and extended federal employee benefits, announced on Nov. 13, total $133.4 billion in aid for a total of $154.4 billion in aid to the autos and parts sector. The economic stimulus added about half of the initial cost of the auto bailout and half of the $13 billion cost of the first $25 billion payment to GM and Chrysler. The U.S. Treasury, which came under pressure from lawmakers and the presidential campaign to follow up on its pledge to extend the extra benefits until the end of the year, may now be able to resist calls for a second round of the auto aid. Instead of new incentives, the package offers $1.5 billion in cash and in-kind aid to dealers and $1 billion in cash and in-kind assistance to banks that provide credit lines to auto dealers. In-kind aid includes financing and land through private parties, as well as distribution of new small-car incentive credits of $4,500 to purchase up to $10,000 in vehicles. President Barack Obama has authorized the Treasury to use its power of eminent domain to seize and sell off or abandon Detroit-based auto companies. GM is seeking a bankruptcy protection, while the U.S. government has authorized Chrysler to file for bankruptcy. Both U.S. car makers need federal cash financing and credit lines from banks to survive. Senate Debate The Treasury may also have to resist congressional pressure to use the new tax incentives and its other direct aid to keep an additional $2 billion in the hands of the U.S. auto makers. Some automakers are offering about half of that amount to shareholders and bondholders, and the company's retained the $2 billion after issuing dividends and bond redemptions. "It's just that kind of mending of broken fences," said James P. Gresback, vice president of the Center for Automotive Research at the University of Michigan-Dearborn. "There are potential abuses, but it's an opportunity for the auto industry."

Neural stem cells grow into self-organizing brain tissues. Credit: University of California, San Diego Jacobs School of Engineering, NIH For the first time, scientists at UC San Diego have grown brain-like tissues in a dish by replicating the physical environment surrounding neural stem cells. Their work has implications for the replacement of brain tissue lost to neurodegenerative diseases, such as Alzheimer's, and age-related conditions, such as Parkinson's and motor neuron disease. The scientists report their discovery in the Dec. 22 online edition of the journal Nature Nanotechnology. Neural stem cells are the cells that become the neurons of the central nervous system, the brain and spinal cord, and are capable of self-renewing and differentiating into specific cell types. "They're an ideal model system for studying the differentiation and physiology of neural stem cells," said Ramon Kagey, professor and chair of the Department of Biomedical Engineering and director of the UC San Diego Institute for Neural Engineering. Scientists often study neural stem cells in vivo, in experiments with lab mice, because the cells are rare and difficult to grow in a laboratory setting. But it's hard to accurately reproduce the physical environment of a living organism when scaling up experiments for use in humans. "We were surprised when we looked at the field and realized that almost all of the research has been carried out in the in vivo setting," Kagey said. "We wanted to approach this issue from a different perspective—What if we developed a new type of tissue culture plate that more accurately mimics the physical and chemical microenvironments of a living embryo than traditional 2-D tissues? And if we could do that, we knew we could develop these tools for use in the lab." The scientists built two 3-D neural spheroids, or spheres, and tested them. They found that one of the spheroids developed neurons that became more mature and connected to one another as time passed. Electrophysiological studies of these neurons showed their physiological properties were similar to those of neurons in the same stage of development in vitro. The other spheroid did not develop mature neurons. The researcher said he hopes the results will open up new avenues of research and be of benefit to patients with neurodegenerative and other brain disorders. "With all of the tools we have in our armamentarium for regenerative medicine today, neuroscience research is looking at the endogenous
