According to the American Cancer Society, an estimated 1.7 million women are diagnosed each year with invasive breast cancer, and breast cancer is the second leading cause of cancer mortality in women, resulting in more than 400,000 deaths per year. Locally advanced breast cancer is defined as cancer that extends beyond the breast and beyond the surrounding lymph nodes. Now, research from the University of British Columbia suggests that the ability of biologically inactive estrogen (the synthetic form of estrogen) to promote the growth of estrogen-dependent breast cancers can be halted by a novel drug compound. The research provides evidence that a drug called fulvestrant, a drug that was approved in 1995 to treat advanced breast cancer that has spread to the bones, can also prevent the growth of estrogen-receptor-positive breast cancers that are not spreading. The study was published in the October issue of Breast Cancer Research and Treatment and was funded by the Canadian Breast Cancer Research Alliance and the Canadian Institutes of Health Research. When estrogen binds to the cell's estrogen receptors, it can activate certain genes within the cancer cells, initiating genetic changes that drive the cancer cells to grow and 0298e982ba
