This is a listing of women who have been evaluated at the NIH Clinical Center for HAV infection. †All women were tested for HAV IgM antibody. NOTE: Newborn infants and women of childbearing age are at highest risk of HAV infection and severe disease. A vaccine is not currently available. HDV-1 and HDV-2 have been detected in persons with acute symptomatic hepatitis B virus (HBV) infections. However, HBV and HDV coinfections are uncommon and the prevalence of HDV is low. Studies of pregnancy outcomes in women with HBV and HDV coinfection may shed light on the importance of HBV and HDV coinfection, potential synergism, the outcome of a clinical acute infection, and the efficacy of anti-HDV therapy in pregnant women with CHB who have abnormal ALT or evidence of active HBV replication. OBJECTIVE: We sought to evaluate the characteristics and outcomes of pregnant women with HDV coinfection with HBV. METHODS: From March 1990 through April 1998, we evaluated all pregnant women (n = 557) who had presented to the Clinical Center for a complete physical examination and blood draw at a time during which routine testing for HBV was performed at the time of delivery (ALB, 4.5%; HBA1C, 9.7%; GGT, 19.2%). Serologic tests for HDV-1 and HDV-2, HBV-DNA, and hepatitis B surface antigen (HBsAg) tests were performed for HDV infection; alanine aminotransferase (ALT) tests were performed for hepatitis; HBA1C, ALB, and glucose levels were measured at a time of delivery. RESULTS: Of the 557 pregnant women, 102 women (18.6%) had evidence of chronic hepatitis B; all of these women were also tested for HDV infection. Fifty-two (51%) women were at risk for HDV; 50 had positive tests for HDV-2 and 2 had positive

On the 25th of September, the Family made their way to Gallatin, Tennessee to keep a church meeting. People from the area were dropping in to visit the Family and see what their plans for the future were. This meeting was the first of many outreach "investigative" raids on the Family in 1969.
