This has been particularly true of some children in New York City, particularly those of Puerto Rican descent. A high lead content in children's blood of New York City may also be affecting children of Chinese descent. It has also been reported that lead levels in children's blood of Newark, NJ, in which anemic children have been identified as a potential high risk group, have increased four to five times. In New York City, lead in the soil has been a significant health concern. Children's umbilical cords, blood, and hair have all been found to contain relatively high lead levels. In children's blood in New York City, lead levels have e24f408de9
