It's no wonder, considering that Mozilla has now put it on the front line of user privacy and security. With this in mind, the web giant is constantly on the lookout for all the potential options. The truth is, however, that many users have found the extensions they use at this point in time to be more than sufficient. That's why we've compiled a list of what's happening in the Firefox Extensions ecosystem right now. Firefox Roadmap Extensions Necessary Alerts is an extension that does exactly what it says on the tin. It's meant to serve as a useful tool for those who care a lot about their online privacy, making their Firefox browser safe and secure. A must-have Firefox extension Necessary Alerts can detect any website that's out to exploit your personal data. It does this by observing changes in your usual browsing activities and by blocking any potential evil-doers. An alert is shown every time that a website out to spy on you is detected. This block offers you with the chance to get rid of that website straight away. Likewise, there's an option available to block a website permanently by enabling the "Auto Block" option. You'll have to manually unsubscribe from individual notifications though, as Necessary Alerts makes use of Mozilla's Safe Browsing service. This extension is an all-in-one solution for all your security needs, including ad-blocking, malware, phishing, and privacy issues. Necessary Alerts is cross-browser compatible; it's available for Chrome, Opera, and Safari browsers. To get Necessary Alerts, you can download it from here:
