It will work in a browser (though it won't be as convenient, presumably, as Adobe's product). Modification of antigenicity of human low-density lipoprotein by replacing apolipoprotein B-100 by recombinant fragments derived from a nonimmunogenic variant. The immunogenicity of isolated human low-density lipoprotein (LDL) is altered by removing LDL apolipoprotein B-100 by proteolysis with an IgG1 monoclonal antibody. We have used two of the proteolytic fragments, 93-140 and 93-151, to determine whether these fragments might bind correctly to LDL receptors. The properties of the 92-151 fragment which have been studied most extensively reveal characteristics of the native protein that are altered by the recombinant protein. Binding to LDL receptors is retained, but antigenicity is lost. The binding of the intact protein is also lost. The antigenic site of the intact protein and its receptor appears to be the single linear polypeptide. Recombinant fragments can be used to compete and to protect LDL against the biological effects of IgG1; this is not possible with intact LDL. The functional, immunological and biochemical properties of LDL are altered in ways that can be evaluated by following the fate of the LDL particles in various biological systems. The world is more than likely going to start dying out, and this video explains why we need to act fast. In a recent TED talk, Tim Flannery, climate scientist, points out that the world is on the brink of destroying itself and that the time to act is now. As he puts it, "The world is going to change dramatically for the next 100 years." The world would likely not survive the changes brought about by climate change, and you can watch the video to find out why.
