I tried @Resource and @EJB annotations to inject the EJB bean in CDI scope. @Resource private void setEjbBean(Ejb ejb) { this.ejb = ejb; } I am getting the following exception: The bean named 'ejb' has a scope type that is neither 'prototype' nor 'application' A: This sounds like you have a persistence layer that is using the EJB 3.1 API, which is a JPA API. The persistence layer will probably be intercepting the injection of the EJBs and trying to wire in a JPA implementation of the EJB 3.1 API. Unfortunately there is no portable way to inject a JPA API implementation without some more effort. If you use the embedded database, H2, you can specify a custom provider in the persistence.xml. These mutations are very sensitive and specific for the detection of colorectal carcinomas in biopsy samples. We developed an LNA probe that can detect Ki-ras mutations in colorectal carcinomas. The detection of Ki-ras mutations in cancer tissue using the LNA probe was evaluated. The LNA probe has a greater sensitivity than other detection methods.
