morphology of the spherical nanocavities in the gold nanoparticles (NP) by electric-field-induced self-assembly of the negatively charged citrate-capped NP.

The NP assembly leads to the confinement and modulation of the electrostatic repulsion within the interior of the NP, which allows the nanoparticles to self-assemble into the spherical cages of "glassy" core-shell morphology. The optical properties of the NP were investigated and show dramatic and reversible changes upon the electric-field-induced self-assembly of the NP. This finding opens the way for the design of nanosized structures based on the electric control of the self-assembly of the gold NPs.

After weeks of preparation, one of the most momentous events in the history of West African witchcraft began on Sunday, with witch doctors – both black and white – summoned to the margins of the 12th century kingship of Mauritania's ancient Adrar region. "After the signal, here he comes," said an observer at the annual tribal gathering, as a lone, white-robed figure descended, followed by a dozen or so others. This was the signal for a hunt for the black ones, the black witch doctors, to begin. "In groups of five or six, the men of the Adrar appeared," the observer said. "They were seeking them, the root of all things, the source of life, the force that created the great ancestral families. It was their intention to destroy them." The two-day demonstration of the power of magic is one of the West African world's largest gatherings of its kind, with up to 100,000 people taking part in the events, which include a contest for dancing girls and machetes, and a ceremony in which a specially exhumed bone is re-buried. In the shadow of the pyramids, drama fills the air, as the witch doctors perform their rites, casting their shadows on the walls. Maurel, a leading witch doctor in the region, said a group of men had killed a rival band of black witch doctors who had
