Our Labrador Retriever, Daisy, is almost 14 months old and we love her so much. Unfortunately I don't think our house is big enough anymore as we are constantly tripping over her, have to step over her, and so on. She's really messy, and it's easy to forget where she is (as most Labradors tend to be) so we would like to get a bigger dog and a bit more controlled. But we don't know any dog of any other breeds, even in the city. I've seen them on the street or at the park, but always from a distance.

Then I saw an offer online for puppies of three different breeds, and the cute dog looked like this:

a Maltese and Yorkshire Terrier puppy. I really want to get her, as I am partial to mix breeds, but I have no idea what she looks like and cannot tell whether she is as cute as the picture. By the way, could anyone tell me how I should be named and when? I wanted to name her Bubble, but then I remembered that dog's name and here the name already is taken by another dog! I'm a bit worried as I don't like to buy from unknown breeders, though I know that it's probably safe in this case, but I don't know why it should be! I love that dog and she deserves to be loved, and I would like to give her that. Finally, are there any other kind of dog that you would recommend to me? I'd love to get a mix of that cute puppy and another, if possible! Re: Which dog should I get? I really like this post! I was just asking myself the same questions about what kind of dog I wanted and wouldn't mind something with some "stuff". I
