1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of calculating an amount of the so-called “over-banding” that has occurred in transmission of packet data to a user in a packet communication system such as IP (Internet Protocol) or UDP (User Datagram Protocol). 2. Description of the Related Art Generally, in a packet communication system such as an IP (Internet Protocol) network, when a communication packet that carries a datagram, which is called “user data”, is transmitted from an IP data transmission apparatus to another IP data transmission apparatus, the IP packet may be lost in the course of transmission to the IP data transmission apparatus due to various causes that include fading of a radio wave, and the like. The IP packet that has been lost cannot be given to the IP data transmission apparatus as an ICMP (Internet Control Message Protocol) packet that is returned to the IP data transmission apparatus. Therefore, as shown in FIG. 12A, in order to give the lost IP packet a destination address as it is, the IP packet is re-transmitted to the IP data transmission apparatus from a data transmission apparatus B1 in an IP network where a band is wide at a position of the data transmission apparatus B1, namely, where the transmission band is wide, or the IP packet is re-transmitted to the IP data transmission apparatus from a data transmission apparatus B2 in an IP network where a band is narrow at a position of the data transmission apparatus B2, namely, where the transmission band is narrow. More specifically, in the former case, the IP data transmission apparatus B1 forwards the re-transmitted IP packet to the IP data transmission apparatus B2 by way of a transfer path that is a loop. In the latter case, the IP data transmission apparatus B1 forwards the re-transmitted IP packet to the IP data transmission apparatus B2 by way of a transfer path different from that on which the IP packet was transferred at the time of occurrence of the packet loss. In the case where the packet loss is due to fading of a radio wave, the IP packet may not have been re-transmitted to the IP data transmission apparatus B1 due to fading of the radio wave when the IP data transmission apparatus B1 receives the IP packet. In this case, the IP packet is re-transmitted to the IP data transmission apparatus B1 from the data transmission apparatus B2. In these cases, there is a case where the
